Thomas Blasts Off

Today was the day of the big rocket launch on Sodor. All the engines were so excited to see a rocket fly.

"Prepare to blast off!" peeped Thomas.

But when the engines got to Knapford Station, the rocket was in pieces.

"The rocket fell apart!" gasped Percy.

Gordon chuckled. "No, no. It's just too big to deliver in one piece," he said. "You will all have to take it to Brendam Docks in small pieces."

"Woo-hoo!" the engines cheered. Now they were even more excited. They got to deliver a real-life rocket!

Nia took the shell of the rocket. "Toot-ally awesome!"

Kana took the booster. "That's what makes it go, go, go!"

Diesel took the wings. "Now it can fly!"

What part could Thomas deliver?

All that was left was a tiny battery.

"B-b-but I wanted to take a big part, like everyone else," said Thomas.

"This is teeny-weeny."

Gordon told Thomas that the battery was very important, but Thomas felt disappointed.
