I walk through iron gates and up a winding path that leads me past some large gravestones. When my friends said I should go into the Haunted Mansion alone, I laughed. But when they dared me, I knew I had to.

After pushing the creaky front door open, I enter a large, round room with portraits lining the walls. Suddenly, the door slams shut, trapping me inside!

"Welcome, foolish mortal, to the Haunted Mansion," says an ominous voice. "I am your host . . . your ghost host."

Before my eyes, the walls start stretching! Then the room goes dark, and I hear a scream in the distance. When the lights come back on, there is an open door in front of me that wasn't there before.

"Now, as they say, look alive, and we'll continue our little tour," the ghost host says as I walk through the door and along the hallway gallery. Lightning strikes outside the windows, allowing me to see the portraits on the wall. "Alive" is not exactly how the subjects looked when their eerie images were painted!

"And now a carriage will take you into the boundless realm of the supernatural," the ghost host says.

I see a small black Doom Buggy. I hesitate but board the carriage, and it immediately moves forward.

There's no turning back now.
